Kyle Stuckey

Kyle Stuckey (born 1987) began studying art during his high school years by private instruction through Lori Woodward Simons and various workshops, later becoming a member of the Putney Painters where he was able to continue to hone his skills in the presence of some of the greatest artists today, including Richard Schmid and Nancy Guzik.

His work is strongly influenced by his study of historical artists including: John William Waterhouse, William Bouguereau, John Singer Sargent, Anders Zorn, and Lawrence Alma-Tadema. Over the years, he has developed and refined his style, working with oil as an Impressionistic Realism artist.

He would describe his style this way: "I paint in the way I see my subject matter, trying to mimic the way the human eye sees. Not everything is in focus at one time. Regardless of what my subject matter may be, in my paintings I focus on what I find inspiring in that subject. This way the viewer can see my vision and perhaps share in that experience. At the same time, I want my paintings to have visual variety in detail and texture by using the full potential of the oils with the variations of texture and transparency."

He enjoys painting an array of subject matter whether it be landscape, still life, or figurative. His goal is to accomplish an accurate rendering of the subject's beauty through form, light, and color.

The last few years Kyle has spent his time traveling around the world, painting as he goes. Originally from New Hampshire, he has spent nearly two years in Nevada. He has also spent some time in Vietnam, Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, lived eight months in Costa Rica and two months in Rome traveling throughout Italy. Now he is living in Charleston, SC, where he continues to paint until the next trip abroad. "Of course, I love to see new things and experience new cultures, but it may be even more exciting to be able to share those experiences with my clients and fans through my art."

Kyle Stuckey – Artist's Statement:

My work is a representation of what I see. Life experiences are a constant; we are always seeing and feeling, from the minor to the extravagant. Beauty, fear, excitement, love, sadness, and peace are all the things that make life what it is.

When I was young aspiring artist, I would marvel at the abilities of masters like John William Waterhouse, John Singer Sargent, Anders Zorn, William Bouguereau, and many more. I was not only inspired by the way they mastered their technique in controlling value, color, composition, and drawing, but also the ability to tell stories and relay emotion and experiences in their art.

As an artist, I strive to do the same; my passion is to capture that beauty and evoke those human emotions through my art. I want the viewer to get lost in my work and be able to relate to and feel what it is that I'm saying. Yes, I do create art for me; I paint the things I paint because I like them and want to paint them, but if I can create a work of art that causes someone to stop and look because they just cannot help themselves, then I have accomplished one of my goals.

My style is impressionistic realism, you could say. I do want to have an accurate rendering of my subject, but not every detail needs to be there. Like a well-written book or musical score, it does not need to be filled with every minor detail in order to tell your story. There is a place for full detail, and there is a place for simplicity and space –just enough information for your audience to understand and feel what you are saying. It is about the big picture, the artwork as a whole.

My work often uses the full value scale. I like to have a high contrast of lights and darks, along with accurate vibrant colors and a variety in brushwork, paint texture, and transparency.

I was first drawn to the art world through illustration and figurative artwork. I loved the idea of being able to tell a whole story in a single image. And although that is still a passion of mine, the subject matter is somewhat irrelevant – the goal is still to capture the emotions of life experiences and its natural beauty. If I find beauty or interest in it, and it speaks to me, then I want to paint it.
