About the Artist: Valerio D'Ospina

“As if viewing cityscapes from the vantage point of a bird swooping through the sky or from the window of a speeding car, Italian artist Valerio D’Ospina sets the world in motion through quick and expressive brushstrokes. The artist imbues the streets of Italy, New York, and Paris with a bold sense of energy that can appear both exciting and foreboding, depending on your perspective. D’Ospina also finds beauty in industrial transportation, specifically oil tankers and old locomotives that lumber into rail yards or sit docked in harbors with a captivating sense of dignity [...]”

Emilio Valerio D'Ospina was born in 1980 in Taranto, Italy. After earning an artistic diploma from Liceo Artistico Statale "Lisippo" in Taranto, Valerio relocated to Florence, Italy and later Paris, France to continue his studies and absorb the work of the Old Masters. Upon returning to Florence, he continued to develop his artwork and completed his degree in Painting. In 2006, he enrolled in COBASLID, a two-year program to become certified as a professor of art, at the Accademia di Belle Arti in Florence. Before even completing the program, Valerio was offered a position to teach at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Therefore, upon completing the COBASLID program, he traveled to the United States and began teaching. However, after teaching for some time, Valerio began to focus solely on his painting career.

His energetic, unique style of painting cityscapes and industrial scenes has earned him numerous awards and accolades, and he has been ranked by several art publications as one of the most contemporary painters of his genre in America.

Valerio's work has been featured in prominent art magazines, online platforms, has been the subject of art lectures in universities and academies of fine art all over the world, and has been published in fine art textbooks. His work has also been acquired by significant corporate and private collections as well as international modern and contemporary art museum collections. Valerio D'Ospina currently lives and works in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
